

06-21-2012 David picked us up at the train station last night and it felt good to be home in Belgium.

Some of the girls needed a USA fix so Ja-Deen took us to Mc D's ... Joyce and Dave had big Macs, medium coke and shared french fries at a cost of aprox $18 American dollars You even have to pay for a little tub of ketchup! It was well worth it.

Next stop ... We visited a chocolate factory. Unbelievable place. You can sample all of the chocolate and it doesn't cost a dime. Dave had to go outside after 20 minutes of sampling some of the finest chocolate in the world. He was afraid of a super reflux attack:-) ... It was sooo good!

The girls leaving the factor ... With bags of chocolate!

Next stop We visited the Villers Abbey ruins. The abbey was huge, containing a Warming House, Monks' Refectory, kitchen, pharmacy, church, infirmary, workshops ... And more.

Ja-Deen, Jade and Angie climbed stairs to get a second story view.

All in all it was a great day McD's, chocolate and the visit to the ruins ... Doesn't get much better than this!

Back home at David and Ja-Deens "Robbie" begins his work. Robbie is a robot that begins mowing the grass every night at 8pm and quits around 8am. He takes a few breaks when he gets tired and goes back to his station to get re-charged. The grass always looks trimmed Love this technology!

Tomorrow we head Monschau, Germany for a day trip ... More later!
